Insolvency in the Betting Ring.

f the lake and buy of Yarna. -St James's Ma-

(From the Morning Post.) It is no secret among those who are in the or habit of hearing conversation on such topics and that the settling for the late meetings at Newden in arket has been anything but satisfactory. For of the uninitiated we may explain that this means till, that a certain number of gentlemen have been ons | unable to pay what they have lost; or, in otherent worls, that they have speculated beyond their eas, means. They have, in fact, ricked in bets money las- which they did not possess, and which they be- therefore cannot hand over to those who have ful wan from them. The transaction may not seem to be a very honourable one. To lay money on a rse, borse when you cannot meet the liability if you not lone is a species of gambling without doubtron- would simink. At all events, a similar proceeto ding in other affairs of life would be -all likely to injet with hard words, which are by a spared in the judgment of the turf when the of defaulters are gentlemen-the only term which d in occurs to us as opposed to professional betters. po- It is tene that if any of the latter were to find only them elves in this predicament, without some ofes- very good reason for it, a fur harsher treatment, w of would probably be adopted. A bookmaker who, peral on settling day, is deficient and absent, is called Vhat a "welsher," and had better not appear on a the racecourse again till he has paid up his losses. then But the same rule does not hold good throughin out the habitues of the turf, and what is nerthe method to one is not equally extended to the bar. The result is the existence of a large sum back last by those who, from their position, ought to roper have known butter, which mostly represents the is a creased speculation losses which it is hoped goal some better lock may turn into gains. In the your mean time the debt, supposed to be a debt of duals honour, is left unpaid; perhaps even no altenin it, tion is paid by the high minded loser to the usual gathering at Albert-gate to balance accounts, and very naturally he sees no use in hald going to a place where he would be expected to do the one thing he cannot do, which is to pay his accounts. But if he will for a moment think, over his position, in what way is he difforent to the unlucky fellow whom he has lately seen kicked out of the inclosure of the now grand stand, with his but smashed his cost torn and every man's hand against him, for having done in aminor way that which some of the spectators objecting the fun from the balconius have done inbre extensively f -he has defaulted, he bus speculated too high for his means. The fact is that the pursuit of racing has now reached a point which readers it one of the most dangerons of our public evils. It is rapidly approaching the positions which gambling formerly held minong us till a solutary measure put an end to the hells -as they were foreibly called - where name and fortune were alike agent imperciled. Racing, or, rather the betting and financing which accompany it, has reached a m for stage where it bids fair to fill the vacancy. which has thus been left. We hear of sums of gigantic magnitude wagered as readily as they were of old on the throw of the dice. Government and the Telegraphs. (From the " Spectator.") The Tory Government is apparently about to o a very wise and a very large thing, in doing which they will, unless we are greatly mistaken, have the cordial support of Mr. Gladstone, the originator of the design. According to the Observer, a Bill, drafted some time since, s to be introduced this session giving the Postmaster-Ceneral power is purchase, work, and extend all Telegraphs in Great Britain and Ircland. There is no need to above the existing Companies, which have, on the whole, and with one marked exception, their failure to provide sufficient facilities of delivery-done heir duty as well as the claims of their sharetolders would allow, but it is certain that they but who have not the power to make telegraphic communication a national or universal benefit. They cannot honestly carry it where it does not pay, and the districts in which it does not pay are the districts which want it most. Caithness, for instance, loses thousands a year in the value of its lierring "take" for want of a telegraph, which, as the Companies think, would cost them some fruction of their dividend. The he beach case is the same in parts of Wales, and, indeed, in all districts which lead nowhere and contain uo great centres of population. They, overveighted already by their seclusion, are left without the one instrument to which distance is no barrier, which can gross fifty miles of mour or moraes as quickly as five miles of granite road ir iron rails. Nor can the Companies reach the masses of the people. Unable to stretch their lines everywhere, they are equally unable to make the erent experiment of reaching all classes, by outlines; the reduction of their rates to a uniform figure compared within the reach of every man who is in earnest. al towns: about his message.
